TOM RITCHEY

- Built his first road frame at age 17, and raced it to numerous victories.
- By 1976 he was one of the first US frame builders producing work that was as good as anything coming from Europe. This put US bike builders on the map in a way they hadn't been before.
- 1979 Produced the first production mountain bikes (Ritchey Mountain Bikes) while working with Gary Fisher. He helped establish the commercial viability of the mountain bike, advanced frame design & geometry, and redesigned nearly every component on the traditional bicycle to optimize it for the new sport of mountain biking
- Pioneered the use of fillet brazing for high end racing frames, allowing for more design options than lugged construction offered at the time. This helped pave the way for the mountain bikes, oversized tubing, non-traditional geometry and a litany of other advancements.
- Generated key design elements still in use today including the threadless steer tubes/stems (1972), force directionally butted tubes, oversized steel frame tubing, vector-based off-road tire tread designs (now widely used), and early 29er designs (mountain cross, flat bar off-road bike w/wide 700c knobby tires) before such a thing existed.
- Helped grow the sport of MTB racing through support of young racers such as Don Myrah, Ruthie Matthis, and Thomas Friscknecht.
- Helping to grow the sport of bicycle racing in Africa through his support of Team Rwanda, with the hopes of eventually giving African athletes a chance to compete on the international stage.
- Created several bike designs aimed at bringing affordable, practical cargo bikes to African communities currently lacking viable transit options for goods.
- Competed at a national level from a very early age, earning the nickname 'Senior Slayer' as a junior.
